

Meet Kendall.

She is three and a half. She has asthma. She and her father have spent most of the past year in and out of hospital rooms. He's missed important business trips. She missed last week's preschool graduation. They both still have hope that these visits will stop in time for Kendall to start kindergarten.

A tiny brown rat is Kendall's ticket out of the hospital and onto better things. Although she may not realize it, she depends on our animals. Compromised animals mean compromised research. Their health impacts hers.

Humane Care is our responsibility.
Kendall's life depends on it.
